Please share your educational and career goals/aspirations and how you plan to move toward greatness:

As a man of Morehouse, one of the college's tenets or say Morehouse dogma is the importance of becoming a well-rounded learned man. George S. Clason in his renowned The Richest Man in Babylon truthfully tells us that "the more of wisdom we know, the more we may earn" and includes that "the affairs of man change and improve because keen-minded men seek greater skill that they may better serve those upon whose patronage they depend." As a pre-med biology major, I have come to understand that competence in other areas namely technology and finance are needed not only for individual benefit but as an African American male in a society that does not honestly preach the benefits of a holistic education or provide opportunities to its minority populations.

Finishing and getting my degree is the most important goal of mine currently. Majoring in Biology, with minors in Psychology and Neuroscience I know that I want to be committed to helping individuals and society collectively. Truthfully speaking, I am on the fence about what I would like to do with my degree in the future. Medical school and becoming a physician definitely have been a frontrunner for me, but the more I think about it, it may be due to the title that the position holds that I am attracted to it. Lately, I have been interested in research and furthering my education post baccalaureate. Though not sure exactly what field or area of research I want to do, the aspect of honing concentration to understand an aspect of life for the greater good of humankind is appealing to me.

Regardless of whether going into research or becoming a physician, I understand that the sky is the limit as long as I stay focused and work hard. Easier said than done, but over time I have come to realize that with a set plan and discipline...all things are possible.
